KATE CARTER, an attractive freshman school teacher in the remote northern fly-in community of Loon River has a very good reason for wanting to get home for the winter holidays: her own wedding. However, when a massive blizzard rolls in and flights are grounded, Kate must find another way to travel. Her only option is to hitch a ride by snowmobile with a surly, yet handsome stranger named REDFORD who has always traveled solo. On the three-day journey, the two of them must navigate past a mad trapper, a female-deprived men's work camp and a chilling plunge through thin ice. Through this ordeal, Kate is forced to grow and make her own choices, something she realizes she has never done before, thanks in part to Redford's "tough love".
